

Depression can affect anyone. Each year, 14 million Americans suffer from it. In fact, over 16% of adults in the U.S. will suffer from depression at some point in their lives. It affects the young and the elderly alike.

As narrator lists demographic groups, corresponding members of crowd become highlighted and eventually fade. Female figure remains on the screen.

Most depressed people are in their twenties and thirties.

Two-thirds of all people who develop this illness are women.

- sad or depressed mood
- loss of interest or pleasure in usual activities

Every person experiences depression differently.

If you are depressed you may experience sad moods, lose interest and pleasure in things you once liked to do.

- low energy
- suicidal thoughts

experience low energy or even have thoughts of ending your life.

What causes depression?

It can be spurred on by a number of different factors ... such as trauma

"What causes depression?" is highlighted as it is narrated.

As each factor is narrated, the corresponding image and title appear. After each image is presented, it will shrink, move to a section of the screen and remain in place.

or stress